THE SEASON'S PROSPECTS

Paddling their own canoe for the first time in three years, Pittsburgh's Steelers face the 1945 season with some apprehension but no misgivings.

At least they can't do any worse than last year, when, in combination with the Chicago Cardinals, they lost every game--the first winless campaign in Steeler history.

Two years of "shotgun weddings"--in 1943 with Philadelphia and 1944 with the Cards--have left the Smoky City club with next to nothing in the way of veteran material. When the remains of last year's squad were divided up, the Steelers found themselves owning the contracts of only ten seasoned campaigners.

Thus Jim Leonard, making his debut as a head coach in the National Football League, has a terrific rebuilding job on his hands. All his reserves are new to the post-graduate ranks and there will also be a sprinkling of freshmen in the starting lineup.

Leonard and his assistant, the veteran Lud R. Gray, decided long before fall drills began that the Steelers would return to the Notre Dame system as the basis of their offense. The Steelers used the T-formation during both their mergers.

Being short on material as he is, Leonard has adapted his plays to suit the personnel. An exacting coach and strategist, he insists on absolute perfection, and prefers sound football to the sensational type.

"We hope to make up in hustle and a good, sound game what we lack in experience," the new mentor says. "I think we'll be able to give anyone a good battle. We certainly aren't going to take any pushing around."

JAMES R. (Big Jim) LEONARD

Head Coach

At 35, one of the youngest coaches in professional football, handsome Jim Leonard is serving his first year as head mentor of the Steelers.

A student of the late Knute Rockne, Leonard is putting into practice the knowledge he gained while playing under the immortal "Rock" at Notre Dame as a guard in 1931 and fullback in '32 and '33. He has made the Notre Dame System the basis of his Steeler offense, even though Pittsburgh used the T-formation the last two years.

Following a great career at South Bend, the lad who left his home at Mulica Hill, N. J., to step into the national spotlight, got his initial taste of the post-graduate game. He joined the Philadelphia Eagles in 1934 and remained with them four years.

At that point Leonard took his first coaching job. He was given the head mentorship at St. Francis College, Loretto, Pa., and remained there four years also. Under his tutelage, the "Red Flashes" rose to their greatest heights on the gridiron, but were forced to abandon the game for the duration following the 1941 season.

Leonard was signed by the Steelers for 1942 as backfield coach even before St. Francis abandoned football. With Head Coach Walt Kiesling, whom he succeeded this year, he helped guide the Smoky City club to the best season in its history—winning seven, losing four, and coming within one game of the Eastern Division title.

When the Steelers merged with Philadelphia for 1943, Big Jim went to Holy Cross as backfield coach, but returned to Pittsburgh last season in the same capacity with the combined Steelers and Chicago Cardinals.

Born on Feb. 14, 1910, at Mulica Hill, Leonard still makes his home there in the off-season, keeping busy on his 100-acre asparagus farm.

LUDLOW R. WRAY

Assistant Coach

Out the coaching "old guard", Lud Wray comes this year to assist his former pupil, Jim Leonard.

Wray has been associated with football since 1914, when he played his first year with the University of Pennsylvania. His college days were interrupted by the war and in 1917 he enlisted in Naval Aviation, seeing service in France. After playing with service teams those two years, Wray returned to Penn and again starred in 1919—his final year as one of Penn's greatest centers.

Among Wray's teammates at Penn were Bert Bell, now co-owner of the Steelers; Lou Little, coach at Columbia U.; Heinie Miller, Col. Howard Berry and many other famous gridiron heroes.

His professional career began in 1920 with the Buffalo Americans--National Football League champs that season. Another year followed with the Philadelphia Quakers, an independent outfit, and in 1922 and '23 Lud starred with the famous Frankfort Yellow Jackets of the N.F.L.

1923 also found him helping at Penn as assistant line coach and from 1924 to 1929 inclusive he was head line coach for the Quakers, and in 1930 took over the head mentor's job for one campaign.

A year followed at Chestnut Hill Academy and in 1932 Wray led the newly-organized Boston Braves (now Washington Redskins) to the finest first-year record ever compiled by a new team in the National League--four won, four lost, two tied.

In 1933 Wray and Bell organized the Philadelphia Eagles and he coached them for three years, one of his brightest pupils being Leonard. After another two years in the prep school ranks, Lud served Manhattan as line coach in 1938-'39-'40 and Holy Cross in the same capacity in 1942 and '43. He and Leonard again crossed paths there, Jim being the Crusaders' backfield mentor in 1943. This is Wray's first year with the Steelers.
